RENTING A HOUSE OR APARTMENT

1. INTRODUCTION

Many people have problems with their landlord after they have rented or leased a house or an apartment. A careful reading and a clear understanding of the agreement before signing it can avoid several of these difficulties. Leasing contracts are often hard to comprehend because of their complex language. Therefore, it is very important that you read any agreement closely. Make sure you and the landlord have the same understanding of any questionable language before you sign the lease (see Final Checklist). Be aware, however, that some guidelines set out in this publication apply only to “professional” landlords who rent more than eleven units and/or employ a third-party manager.

If you still have questions, please take advantage of the walk-in legal assistance program at the Robins Air Force Base legal office (926-3961). The attorneys there can explain any lease terms and advise you of possible unfavorable provisions.

2. BEFORE MOVING IN

Some managers require an application fee that is usually non-refundable if you decide not to move into that particular complex. In addition, most landlords expect a security deposit before they let you occupy your new residence. This amount varies and may range from $150 to one month rent or more. The deposit is designed to cover any back rent owed upon moving out as well as any damages to the dwelling unit.

Therefore, before paying the deposit you should conduct a thorough move-in inspection of your new residence with your landlord or representing agent. Note every problem you observe in writing and get a copy of the inspection signed by both you and the landlord. Consider that you are expected to return the house or apartment in the same condition as you found it (this inspection is used as a guideline for possible damage upon move-out) except for normal wear and tear. If existing problems have not been recorded in this document, you may be held responsible for damages not caused by you.

If you do not agree with your prospective landlord about the problems present, you should put your disagreement in writing and submit such a signed statement to your management. For example, according to Georgia law, a landlord cannot include a provision in the lease that you are accepting the residence “as is”. An implied promise, contained in the Code, guarantees that the rented premises are in good condition. The landlord or his agent cannot use your security deposit in their daily business dealings. It has to be placed in a special account or surety bond. They must inform you in writing of the deposit location and the account number. Most landlords fail to comply with this legal requirement and you should insist on this information. (If nothing else, it will make your landlord aware of your knowledge of your rights and might prevent any attempt to take advantage of you.) Under normal circumstances, your written agreement specifies the beginning date, the length of the lease and its termination date. However, if you did not enter a written agreement containing these conditions, your tenancy may be terminated by the landlord with a 60-day notice or by you informing the landlord of your move-out 30 days before you vacate the premises. The law requires a written rental or lease contract when the lease period extends over one year.

The Georgia Legislature has taken into account that military personnel are subject to sudden changes in assignment by specifically providing that long-term leases may be canceled when military personnel receive orders for permanent change of duty or TDY for more than three months. To avoid trouble in the future, discuss this law with your prospective landlord who might not be aware of it. According to the law, you cannot be held liable for more than thirty days rent after your written notification to the landlord that you have received TDY orders for more than ninety days or PCS orders. This provision covers only TDY and PCS and does not extend to any relocation into base housing. Under those circumstances, the landlord can hold you liable for the unexpired time of your lease during which he cannot rent the premises. You should discuss the addition of a clause that may release you from this obligation if you are on the base housing list.

3. WHILE LIVING ON THE PREMISES

After you have moved into your new home, both you and your landlord have certain responsibilities that you have to consider.

a. Landlord's Responsibilities

The law requires your landlord to repair any damage to your apartment that is beyond normal wear and tear. This includes structural problems as well as any trouble with appliances essential to the occupancy of the residence. It does not apply to damages caused by you or through your occupancy. Therefore, take good care of the premises and instruct your household members and guests to do the same. You should inform your manager immediately of any problems and insist on prompt repair. If you allow the conditions to linger, the landlord may not be liable. Be insistent; this is your legal right.

In the rare instance, where the landlord's failure to repair causes the dwelling unit to become uninhabitable, you can be constructively evicted. This means, that you are no longer contractually bound by your lease or rent agreement until the landlord restores your home. Be sure to check with the legal office to establish your rights and responsibilities in a constructive eviction.

b. Renter's Responsibilities

As a tenant, you have certain responsibilities. These include (but are not limited to) your duty to pay your rent on time, to prevent disorderly conduct by anyone on your premises, to obey the rules and regulations you signed in your lease, and to disallow criminal conduct.

Your most important obligation to your landlord is your timely rent payment. Landlords, like you and me, rely on their projected income to meet their responsibilities. Your late or non-payment of the rent creates a serious problem. The courts have given landlords certain remedies to assure the coverage of any potential losses. For example, your landlord can withhold any unpaid rent from your security deposit. He also may seize the tenant's property after applying for a distress warrant after the rent is due in case the tenant attempts to remove his or her belongings from the dwelling. For example, if your apartment stays empty for four months, you are required to pay the landlord the rent for those four months or you may lose personal property to cover the outstanding debt.

You are bound by the rules and regulations you signed in your lease or rental agreement. Continuous violation of these rules as well as disorderly conduct may result in an eviction. You are also responsible for the actions of your household members and your guests. Any criminal conduct on the premises is sure grounds for eviction. For example, any drug use or sale in your residence can result in legal actions that cause you to lose your home.

Do not forget, an eviction does not relieve you of your obligation to pay rent until the unit can be leased to a third party. Therefore, be aware of your responsibilities and do not give your landlord reasons to take actions against you.

4. AFTER MOVING OUT

You have to return the premises to the landlord in essentially the same shape that you received them (remember the all-important move-in inspection!!). The landlord should expect and consider normal wear and tear. He has to conduct his inspection within three business days after you terminated the lease and must give you a written listing of such inspection. Both parties have to sign this document. If there are no damages and no back rent due, the landlord has to return your security deposit within one month.

A dispute as to damages entitles you to inspect the premises within five days after termination to establish the validity of the move-out inspection. Any discrepancy between you and the landlord must be in writing and signed. It may be a good idea to take pictures of any contested problems that could substantiate your claim. The landlord is entitled to deduct from the deposit any amount necessary to return the dwelling unit to its original condition. He also may subtract any unpaid rent. He has to supply you with a written statement specifically justifying the exact dollar amount withheld.

If the landlord did not deposit your security deposit in an escrow account or did not post a surety bond and failed to give a detailed initial and final inspection list, he may not keep any portion of the deposit. The money is also forfeited when the landlord does not supply you with the written inspection reports within the specified time period. You are entitled to triple damages as well as reasonable attorney's fees when a landlord improperly withholds your security deposit unless your landlord owns less than eleven rental units and/or does not employ a third party for management purposes.

FINAL CHECKLIST

- ⇒ Before signing your lease and moving in, read every paragraph in your lease agreement carefully and make sure you understand it. If you have any questions, please consult a lawyer at the base legal office.
- ⇒ Request a written inspection of the premises; if you disagree, provide a detailed list in writing.
- ⇒ Ensure that your landlord gives you a written statement of where your security deposits is deposited (account number and bank or surety bond).
- ⇒ Treat your new home as if were your own. You are responsible for any damages beyond normal wear and tear.
- ⇒ Live up to your legal responsibilities including rent payment and appropriate conduct.
- ⇒ Upon move-out, get a detailed, written move-out inspection within three business days. If you disagree, put it in writing. You have to receive any money due within one month of the termination of the lease.
- ⇒ If your landlord held your deposit illegally, you may be entitled to triple damages plus attorney fees.

RENTER'S INSURANCE BASICS

WHY RENTER'S INSURANCE?

Don't get caught "out on a limb." As a tenant, you probably own furniture, appliances, a wardrobe and other valuable items. Some tenants assume that their personal belongings are insured against loss or damage by the landlord's insurance policy. That is not true. Your landlord probably has insurance to cover the house or apartment building, but it does not include coverage for your personal belongings.

Nor does your landlord's policy cover your liability to others - someone else's injury or damage for which you may be held responsible. For example, a visitor could slip and fall in your apartment, suffer a head injury resulting in vision problems - and sue you for thousands of dollars.

A special policy, known as the Tenants Form (HO-4), is available to meet your particular insurance needs as a tenant.

PERSONAL BELONGINGS

Your personal property is covered, whether it is in your home or elsewhere. A standard tenant's policy covers furniture, clothing and most other personal belongings for their actual cash value at the time of loss, but it provides only limited coverage for furs, jewelry, silver and other specific valuables. You may wish to protect your investments and such valuables under a special addition to your tenant's policy or under a separate policy.

The tenant's policy insures your household contents and personal belongings against losses from:

- Fire or Lightning
 - Removal of property endangered by fire or other perils
 - Windstorm or hail - explosion
 - Riot or civil commotion
 - Aircraft - vehicles - smoke
 - Vandalism and malicious mischief
 - Theft - falling objects
 - Weight of ice, snow, sleet
 - Building collapse
 - Sudden and accidental tearing apart, cracking, burning, or building of a steam or hot water heating system or of appliance for heating water
 - Accidental discharge, leakage, or overflow of water or steam from within a plumbing, heating and air-conditioning systems or domestic appliance
 - Sudden and accidental injury from artificially generated currents to electrical appliances, devices, fixtures, and wiring (TV and radio tubes not included).
- Of course damage to the actual building is not covered under the tenant's policy.

LIABILITY TO OTHERS

The liability coverage in a tenant's policy applies at home or elsewhere* to injuries or damages caused by you, a member of your family or even a pet. It includes the legal costs of defending you if you are sued.

This coverage does not apply to liability resulting from the use of an automobile, which must be covered separately by an auto insurance policy.*

ADDITIONAL LIVING EXPENSES

Your tenant's coverage also will pay for any increase in living expenses made necessary when your residence cannot be occupied because of damage caused by any of the perils listed above. For example, if your home is badly damaged by fire, you may have to live in a hotel and eat in restaurants while it is being repaired. Your insurance company will reimburse you, up to the limits stated in your policy, for the difference between these expenses and your normal living expenses.

HOW TO DETERMINE YOUR OWN INSURANCE NEEDS

Estimate the value of your household belongings. This estimate will help you decide what amount of insurance to purchase.

Begin by making a list - an inventory - of the contents of your home. Include furniture and major personal belongings, and note prices and dates of purchase where possible. Keep store receipts and photographs of major items in each room with your list. It's a good idea to keep a copy of the inventory and photographs in a safe place away from home.

SHOPPING FOR RENTER'S INSURANCE

Now that you've estimated the amount of insurance you need, you are ready to shop for the best insurance value. Ask friends to recommend insurance agents or companies from whom they have had good service. Or check the yellow pages of your telephone book for insurance representatives in your community. You may wish to talk with several insurance representatives. Take along your household inventory and photographs. Discuss any concern you have about special coverage of furs, jewelry, antiques or other valuables. The representative will recommend coverage to suit your needs. Ask questions about anything you don't understand.

Remember that an insurance policy is a legal contract which defines the duties and responsibilities of both the insurance company and the consumer. It is important for you to have complete confidence in the service to be provided by your insurance company and its representative. Compare costs, quality and coverage, and choose the policy that's right for you.

GETTING THE BEST VALUE

Your responsibility as a wise insurance consumer goes beyond deciding which policy to buy. To get the best value for insurance dollar:

- Read your policy so you will know exactly what is covered and what you should do if you in case you have a loss. (If you have questions, don't hesitate to ask your insurance representative.)
- Report all insurance claims promptly and accurately.
